

Copyright Release for Contributions To HexTools

HexTools is computer software that implements a desktop player utility for a large-scale board wargame. HexTools is available for free download from <http://www.hextools.org> (the “Website”). The principal author and the several maintainers of HexTools have disclaimed all copyright interest in their contributions to HexTools and thus released their contributions into the public domain. In order to keep the HexTools software unencumbered by copyright claims, the HexTools authors ask others who may from time to time contribute changes and enhancements to likewise disclaim their own individual copyright interest.

Because the HexTools software found at the Website is in the public domain, one is free to download the HexTools source code from <https://github.com/HexTools> (the “Repository”), make changes to the software, use, distribute, or sell the modified software, under either the original name or under some new name, without any need to obtain permission, pay royalties, acknowledge the original source of the software, or in any other way compensate, identify, or notify the original authors. One is not in any way compelled to contribute HexTools changes and enhancements back to the Repository. This document concerns only changes and enhancements to HexTools that one intentionally and deliberately may contribute back to the Repository.

For the purposes of this document, HexTools software (“Software”) shall mean any computer source code, documentation, makefiles, test scripts, or other information that one may commit to the Repository or publish to the Website. Precompiled binaries are excluded from the definition of Software in this document because the process of compiling that software may introduce information from outside sources which is not properly a part of HexTools.

The header comments on the HexTools source files exhort the reader to share freely and to never take more than one gives. In the spirit of that exhortation, I make the following declarations:

1. I dedicate to the public domain any and all copyright interest in the Software that was publicly available on the Website prior to the date of the signature below, and any changes or enhancements to the Software that I may cause to be published on the Website in the future. I make this dedication for the benefit of the public at large and to the detriment of my heirs and successors. I intend this dedication to be an overt act of relinquishment in perpetuity of all present and future rights to the Software under copyright law.
2. To the best of my knowledge and belief, the changes and enhancements that I have contributed to the Software are either originally written by me or are derived from prior works which I have verified are also in the public domain and are not subject to claims of copyright by other parties.
3. To the best of my knowledge and belief, no individual, business, organization, government, or other entity has any copyright interest in the Software as it existed on the Website as of the date on the signature line below.
4. I agree never to publish any additional information to the Website or the Repository (by git, CVS, e-mail, scp, FTP, or any other means) unless that information is an original work of authorship by me or is derived from prior published versions of HexTools. I agree never to copy and paste code into the Repository from other sources. I agree never to publish on the Website any information that would violate a law or breach a contract.
